FOCUS ON: 1. Households must earn money to dispose tax obligations; they cannot survive only through unpaid household work. 2. They work for wages. Unpaid household work enters the production of capital assets. Money income is necessary for the reproduction of labor power engaged in unpaid household work. 3. The composition of government expenditures affect the intensity and volume of unpaid household work. 4. The business enterprises decisions to produce capital assets affect households’ financial positions and their burden to engage in unpaid household work. 5. Does the altruistic provision of unpaid household work have affect on the supply prices of capital assets?